Molotov's Future: Alive but Ignored

WALTHAM, Mass., Feb. 5 (UPI)—Former Central Intelligence Agency Director Allen Dulles believes V. M. Molotov will survive — physically — his ideological struggle with the followers of Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev.

Mr. Dulles said that Molotov's future is still in doubt but added, "They don't liquidate people any more because they hold different views. They put them on a met dachna (villa) somewhere near Moscow and see that they're pretty well ignored."

Mr. Dulles said that Khrushchev still feels Premier Joseph V. Stalin is a menace to him.

"There are certain people around, Molotov, for example, and others who still fundamentally believe in some of the Stalinist doctrine," Mr. Dulles said.

Stalin is "still a hero" in his native state of Georgia, Mr. Dulles said, and a new generation of students is "more and more" aware of the rewriting of history.

Mr. Dulles was asked if Khrushchev could "tolerate Molotov around" with his view that "Lenin was a disciple of the stronger policy that Stalin advocated and the Chinese are following."

He replied that Molotov wrote to the Soviet Central Committee with a "strong presentation of the view that Lenin was not a disciple of co-existence." The letter was suppressed because it threatened Khrushchev's idea of peaceful co-existence, Mr. Dulles said.
